MORGAN O'HARA

An exhibition of Morgan O'Hara's work will be at The New Museum of Contemporary Art at 583 Broadway in Soho until March 30.

For 17 years, Morgan O'Hara has recorded all her activities in journals and made diagrams, charts, and even computer print-outs of how she spends her time. Morgan has chosen to pay attention to the details of life itself by painstakingly chronicling her experiences at work, home, and in all her relationships. Through this activity she notices and attends to subtleties that most of us miss or take for granted in our lives.

Portrait of Yasunao Tone

In addition to geographic recordings, this portrait also shows a visual score from the composer's early piece (1963) entitled "Clapping Music"
